Q & A: A Vision of a Prosperous, Free-Market Vietnam

Prime Minister Vo Van Kiet of Vietnam is an architect of his country's mix of a market economy with a one-party, socialist state. Last year, Vietnam had 5.3 percent economic growth, an 18 percent increase in exports and a trade surplus. Mr. Kiet spoke with Sarah Sargent.

Q. The U.S. embargo has narrowed to a question about full accounting of U.S. servicemen still listed as missing in action. How do you view the American position?
A. We have fulfilled our international responsibilities according to our commitments, for example the Cambodian issue and our commitment to the American side on the MIA issue. Even though they maintain the embargo against us, we continue to do our humanitarian duties toward the American soldiers' families.

Q. Cambodia soon will hold multiparty elections. Is there pressure on Vietnam to do the same?
A. The experience of Vietnam, as well as that of certain neighboring countries, is to put the highest importance on stability. Without stability there is no development, and development also creates stability.

Paris May Replace UN Chief in Bosnia

By Alan Riding
New York Times Service

PARIS — The newspaper Le Monde has reported that France has decided to withdraw Lieutenant General Philippe Morillon as commander of the UN forces in Bosnia-Herzegovina and replace him with another French officer.

General Morillon, who assumed the post in March last year, has been fiercely criticized by leaders of Serbian nationalists in Bosnia for his recent efforts to lift the siege of the eastern town of Srebrenica. Many Bosnian Serbs charge that he has taken sides with Bosnia's Muslims in the conflict.

Le Monde, which quoted no sources for its report, said the army's general staff had decided to replace General Morillon because the UN mission in Bosnia would pass into a "more offensive" stage Monday, when NATO aircraft start enforcing a flight exclusion zone over the republic.

Noting that the 58-year-old French officer had been critical of the Serbs, the newspaper said that France's army chief of staff had received reports that General Morillon's life had been threatened. It did not identify the source of the threats or provide any other details.

Interviewed in Bosnia by the private French television network TF-1, General Morillon said that he was being called back for consultations in Paris in the next few days. "I will return," he said. "I hope in the short term, but I also hope after peace is restored."

Defense Minister Francois Liotard, in office post only a week, said Saturday that he had not been informed by the army high command of plans to withdraw General Morillon but added that it would be a routine military decision. "He has already been there longer than others," the minister said.

Mr. Liotard was speaking on television after his return from a two-day visit to some of the 5,000 French troops assigned to the UN peacekeeping force in the former Yugoslavia. During the trip, he also met General Morillon, whom he praised Saturday night for actions that gave both the United Nations and France "a good image."

NATO Ban 'Risky,' Bosnian Serb Says

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Bosnian Serbs said a NATO operation to enforce a flight-exclusion zone over Bosnia, due to start Monday, could worsen the Balkan war.

North Atlantic Treaty Organization fighter planes in northern Italy made final preparations on Sunday to start the operation on Monday.

Radovan Karadzic, the Bosnian Serb leader, said he feared that rival Muslims or Croats would provoke the NATO pilots into an incident. The head of Bosnian Serb forces said the NATO move was an unnecessary use of force.

"This is a very risky decision and a very risky operation," Mr. Karadzic said in a broadcast interview on Saturday. "The Muslim side or the Croatian side may shoot down some of the aircraft and that would be a real escalation of the war."

General Ratko Mladic, the Bosnian Serb commander, was quoted by the Yugoslav press Tanjug as saying: "The decision is an unnecessary application of force. NATO planes are not welcome."

Both leaders said the Bosnian Serbs would not provoke incidents or violate the flight-exclusion rule.

The United Nations created the zone over Bosnia in October. About 50 NATO planes will now start patrols, with orders to shoot down violators if necessary.

Concern about reprisals against UN troops delivering aid in Bosnia has prompted NATO to order pilots to open fire only after repeated warnings or in self-defense.

The UN High Commissioner for Refugees suspended its aid flights into Sarajevo before the NATO patrols were to begin.

A spokesman for the UN agency, John McMillan, said the decision was made because of Serbian anti-aircraft guns near the Sarajevo airport and the threat to UN aircraft flying over territory held by Serbs.

The UN group's effort to evacuate refugees from the eastern town of Srebrenica, which has been besieged by Serbian forces for a year, suffered a setback on Saturday.

BOSNIA: Increased Force Urged

suffering of the hundreds of thousands of civilians in Bosnia.

Two weeks later the team, led by Hugh G. Hamilton, deputy adviser for East European assistance at the State Department, arrived in Bosnia and interviewed aid workers, refugees and others with direct knowledge of the conflict. They returned to Washington on March 11 and summarized their findings in a draft report.

The team, in proposing ways to ease the suffering, said that "safe havens" could protect Bosnian civilians who were being shelled or at risk of being attacked, and implied "a willingness to protect those safe havens."

While the team urged serious consideration of this idea, a Pentagon member of the group reportedly expressed reservations, reflecting Defense Department concerns about being drawn into the fighting in Bosnia.

In another of its recommendations, the team suggested that the administration encourage and assist the United Nations in opening the airport in Tuzla, a city in eastern Bosnia that the team said would be swamped with refugees if nearby enclaves fell to Serbian forces.

Refugees fleeing the advancing Bosnian Serbs have already been evacuated to Muslim-held Tuzla. Delivering supplies to the town, the report noted, was also critical because the city produced coal and played a key role in "what remains" of the economy in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

The report also suggested that the Pentagon and AID experts in communications and logistics help the UN peacekeepers and refugee officials in Bosnia. U.S. military doctors and relief workers from AID should be sent to improve medical care, the report said.

"Short of stopping attacks on civilian populations, these steps will save the greatest number of innocent lives," the summary said.

The Clinton administration's handling of the assessment illustrates how the executive branch can use its control over the machinery of government to shape public debate.

Although Mr. Clinton, during the presidential campaign, advocated the use of force to halt Serbian aggression, he now seems to view that option as imprudent and impractical.

"Folks are not in a 'let the chips fall where they may' mode," said one administration official. "Individual policymakers do not want any more pressure brought to bear on them than they already have."

Richard Boucher, the State Department spokesman, denied the administration was suppressing the team's findings.

EUROPE: As Gloom Spreads, Some Call for Economic Restructuring and Deep Cuts in Welfare-State Benefits

European economy is as fundamentally troubled as some analysts believe.

In the short term, Europe faces the dampening effect of Germany's slide into recession. In the longer term, Western Europe risks being priced out of the global market by its high labor costs and sluggish productivity, and being outflanked by the former communist nations in Eastern Europe, which, once economic basket cases, are now growing into scrappy competitors.

Even in a country like the Netherlands, which is only now beginning to feel the downturn, government officials and business leaders are worried.

"If you'd asked me a couple of years ago about the future, I would have said it looked excellent," said A. H. Rinnooy Kan, president of the Federation of Netherlands Industry, a leading business lobby. "We were on the verge of European integration, and that alone was going to give a big boost to growth rates. But now the outlook everywhere is somewhat more gloomy. You're catching us at a bad moment."

Germans Call It a 'Battle for Resources'

Germany, which is on the economic frontlines, has come up with a word for the new era: Verteilungskampf, or battle for resources.

"We are a country that already bears the brunt of the economic and social challenges of the changing Europe," said Werner Hoyer, parliamentary leader of the Free Democratic Party.

Europe's malaise began in a moment of euphoria—the fall of the Berlin Wall in 1989 and the end of the communist system across Eastern Europe. Germany's rush toward political and economic reunification gave a boost to the whole region.

Last year, the positive influences of reunification began to peter out as the German economy faltered. For other European nations, it was as if the rug had been pulled out from under them. As their own economies drifted toward recession, they were committed to following tight-money policies that hamper growth rather than spark it.

In country after country, bankruptcies quickened, plant closings increased, and unemployment reached benchmark levels: 10.5 percent in Britain, 10.6 percent in France, 9.5 percent in Italy. The European Community has forecast that Communitywide unemployment this year will be 11 percent.

No Letup in Joblessness

More disturbing for government officials and business leaders is that not even the most optimistic forecasters expect those unemployment figures to go down in the short term, or even the medium term. Some economists predict a long period of restructuring during which unemployment will remain at levels once thought intolerable, or even increase.

Geert Zalm, managing director of the Central Planning Bureau, a Dutch government agency that is highly respected for its long-range forecasting, said: "We think that there are structural defects, especially in the labor market. There has to be a restructuring."

According to Mr. Zalm, the labor force in the Netherlands and elsewhere in Western Europe has become too expensive and inflexible. This is a result in large part, he said, of inefficiencies and disincentives provided by the welfare state. In his view, the challenge is to scale back benefits and create a more active work force, while at the same time maintaining the basic ideals of fairness and economic equality.

According to the numbers, the Netherlands is doing quite well. Its exports to Germany have fallen, but big money-earning industries like shipping are holding firm. The economy has not entered recession, and unemployment is only around 7.5 percent.

But that comparatively low unemployment figure masks a striking level of inactivity in the Dutch labor force. About 15 percent of the potential work force is collecting disability benefits under a generous system that has granted workers a net 80 percent of their take-home salaries for life—or at least until they reach retirement age—in the event of total disability. Since unemployment benefits are less generous, many workers who would otherwise be counted in the jobless rolls have managed to get on disability.

The system is vulnerable to manipulation, Mr. Zalm said. "One-third of the disability inflow is because of psychological problems," he said. "Another third is because of back problems, which are sometimes questionable."

The Netherlands has reached a point where too many are being supported by too few. Counting retirees, 86 inactive Dutch citizens receive government support payments for every 100 active workers. In 1973 that ratio was only 52 to 100. Under the Central Planning Bureau's most pessimistic scenarios, the number of inactive people will exceed active workers by 2015.

In the 1960s and 1970s, said Yvonne Van Rooy, the Dutch minister for foreign trade, the Netherlands, along with other European countries, created a society where the government was expected to provide in the areas of health, education, housing and welfare.

But she added, "Now it's important that we organize society in such a way that people are forced to take their own responsibilities, to take initiatives to get results."

Concern in Netherlands on Benefits' Cost

"People have been focused too much on what they can get from the government, not on what they can contribute to the society," she added.

Those benefits are paid for by income and social security taxes averaging nearly 50 percent, and by charges to employers that ultimately are passed along in the form of higher prices. The government recently adopted a law cutting back on disability benefits, for example, but the labor unions are successfully pressing employers to make up the difference so that benefit levels do not actually fall.

In France, the new government is also committed to reducing the heavy taxes and social charges levied against employers. In Britain, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher succeeded in the 1980s in trimming the welfare state; now, although Britain has suffered a worse recession than other European countries, it is considered most likely to be the first European nation to pull out of the slump.

Despite their advocacy, the Dutch labor unions also recognize that a new day has arrived. Jeroen Sprenger, spokesman for the Federation of Dutch Trade Unions, the country's largest labor group, said the federation's bargaining units were willing to accept lower wage increases or even wage freezes if employers would use the money they save to put more people to work.

Dutch Labor Unions Seek 'New Balance'

"We recognize that unemployment is rising, and also that it's not good for a society that there are so many people depending on social security benefits," he said. "That's why we will accept lower wages if more people can get a job. We're all seeking a new kind of balance, a new equilibrium."

The whole benefit system with its high levels of compensation, he said, is based on the family structure of the postwar years, when men were the sole breadwinners and women stayed home to raise large families. If the man became unemployed or disabled, there was no other source of income for the family except government support.

But now, it is common for both husband and wife to work—and uncommon for both to be thrown out of work at the same time. Also, families are much smaller.

MONDAY SPORTS GRAND PRIX

Senna Wins European Grand Prix for 2d in a Row

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches
DORNINGTON, England — Ayrton Senna charged from fifth to first on the first lap Sunday to power to victory in the European Grand Prix, his second Formula One triumph in a row.

ago, now leads the drivers' championship, 12 points ahead of Alain Prost. The Brazilian, has 26 points and the Frenchman, who finished third in a Williams Renault, has 14. Hill has 12.

has no intention yet of signing for the English team for the rest of the season. "Under the circumstances and terms we've had," he said after the race, "I don't regret anything about the season so far. If I don't race again, I won't regret anything."

That means that in three Grand Prix starts, the former Indy car driver has completed only four laps, all of them at the first race in South Africa. In Brazil, he crashed on the first bend.

Hill, who managed to unlap himself 12 laps from the end, described the race as a nightmare. "I wanted to be out of there. It was driving me crazy," said the son of the former world champion Graham Hill.

MONDAY SPORTS MASTERS

Bogey on First Hole Cuts Langer's Lead to 2 in Final Round

Daly Makes Move With Eagle and Birdie

United Press International
AUGUSTA, Georgia — Bernhard Langer's four-shot lead was sliced in half early in Sunday's final round of the Masters as a large crowd of challengers lined up to make a run for the year's first major golf championship.
Langer, winner of the 1985 Masters, hit a poor drive at the first hole, left his approach shot on the front fringe of the green, then chipped the ball all the way through the green. He two-putted from the back fringe for bogey.
He began the day at 9 under par with a four-shot advantage, but his bogey put him at 8 under for the tournament and two shots in front of Masters rookie Tom Lehman, who played the first eight holes in 5 under and was at 6 under for the tournament.
Chip Beck, Dan Forsman, Steve Elkington, Russ Cochran and John Daly were all at 5 under early in their rounds, setting up another wild finish at a tournament that seems to always produce one.
With glorious weather finally warming the Augusta National Golf Club course, the conditions were perfect for excellent scoring. And two-time Masters champ Nick Faldo took advantage of it by equalling the tournament's low round with a 67.
Faldo finished at 5-over 293 after barely surviving the 36-hole cut. "I remembered I can still play Augusta," Faldo said. "I changed my stance and all sorts of little bits on the greens to get my shoulders going.

"There's lots of positive things to take away from the week. I swung the club well. I've the next three weeks off and I'll sit down and learn from it—that's all I can do."
Langer's four-shot lead going into the final round put him in rare company. During the previous 56 Masters, there have been nine players take at least a four-shot cushion into the fourth round and only two have lost — Ken Venturi in 1956 and Ed Sneed in 1979. Two other players have lost after building four-shot leads during the last round.
As Langer walked off the first green, his nearest pursuer was Lehman. As Langer stood on the front of the first green waiting to hit his third shot on the hole, he could see Lehman teeing off from the adjacent ninth hole.
Lehman, who began the day at 1 under, birdied the first three holes and then birdied the seventh and eighth as well.
Daly, meanwhile, eagled the par-5 second after driving into the woods off the tee to get to 4 under and then birdied the par-3 sixth. With his length and his ability to easily reach the par-5 holes, Daly was looking as a threat.
Earlier, Leonard Shapiro of The Washington Post reported: In conditions more suited for golf by the seaside, tricky winds wreaked havoc with scores and psyches in the third round of the Masters and only the relentless Langer was able to avoid catastrophe.

Langer, 35, who won here in 1985, used a 70-foot (21-meter) chip-in at the 11th hole to separate himself from a field that flailed, flopped or stalled for most of a gorgeous afternoon, save for swirling winds. He shot a round of 69 that left him at 9-under 207 going into the final 18 holes, and four shots ahead of his closest pursuers.
Journeyman pro Forsman and Beck, paired with Langer on Saturday, were at 5-under 211. Four others, including veteran Lanny Wadkins, were within five shots of the lead.
Langer has been in contention after three rounds for each of the past seven years, but has played the last 18 holes in 15-over-par during that span, with a best round of 73 in 1989.
Augusta National was littered with the debris of all manner of wrecks Saturday. Only Langer and Craig Stadler, who shot 69 to get to even par, posted scores in the 60s and only 13 players were under par.
Jack Nicklaus began to self-destruct earlier in the morning when he completed his rain-shortened second round by three-putting two of the five holes he played and dropping two strokes to par even though the third round began. Nicklaus bogeyed his first hole in that round later in the afternoon and ended with a 76, out of contention at 2-over 218.
Raymond Floyd, at 50 trying to become the oldest man to win this championship, got himself to 6-under par after the front nine Saturday, then saw his hopes fade with a double bogey adventure in the trees at the 465-yard 13th, a treacherous par-5 in the swirling winds. He finished with 74 and was 3 under for the tournament, as was Greg Norman after a frustrating 71.
"The conditions were difficult with the wind," Floyd said, "and there were some pins out there I'd never seen before. There were some barely on the greens, but that's O.K., at least they were still on the greens."
Halfway leader Jeff Maggart was cruising along at even par until the dreaded 155-yard 12th hole, where a puff of wind carried his tee shot into the azaleas above the green. He hacked his ball out into the trap, blasted it 15 feet and three-putted from there for a bogey he ached to have. Then he had bogeyed at the 13th and 17th. Only a birdie at 18 kept him barely at 4 under after a round of 75.
Forsman's round included two double bogeys, when he air-mailed an 8-iron at the third hole and hit his 4-iron over the green at the 16th and botched a chip. He three-putted again at the 18th and admitted later: "I just ran out of gas."
"Sometimes after a day like this you just want to run away and hide," he said. "But that's the way it's got to be. I need to get off the course, get some bandages and go out and play."
Langer said his main objective with a four-shot lead was to not get too aggressive and merely maintain his composure.
"I'd rather have a four-shot lead than be two behind," he said. "In 1985, I had to go for everything because Curtis Strange got off to a great start."
Sunday, he added, "I can afford to play certain holes less aggressively, hit the middle of some greens and be happy with pars. Hopefully, this time it will be a bit easier."
Langer had five birdies and two bogeys Saturday, making putts of 15 feet at No. 2, of 5 feet at No. 7 and 12 feet at No. 8. His most memorable shot of the day came at the 11th hole, not far from where Larry Mizzy chipped in from 110 feet to beat Greg Norman in a playoff for the 1987 Masters title.
Langer estimated his distance to be about 70 feet, and his sand wedge from close to pin hit high the middle of the green, rolled about 30 feet and went cleanly into the cup.
He bogeyed the 13th when he three-putted from 50 feet, got the stroke back when he made a 15-foot birdie putt at the 14th, and Bernhard Langer led by four shots going into the final round.
